Coaching Philosophy

I believe that volleyball is a fun and exciting game. I believe it is also an educational vehicle for teaching about life. But more than that; right now it is a part of life. My goal is to guide players as they learn and grow in every aspect of the game and thereby develop “the freedom to play.” There are no little things.

Therefore, my principle objectives are:

- To learn and develop individual skills and knowledge of the game; especially in relationship to the team.
- To develop the physical fitness of the individual athlete.
- To learn and develop an attitude and ability for team play and competition.
- To develop sportsmanship, both on the game court and on the practice court.
